

LEARNING THE GAME.

He Has Taken a Leaf Out of Predecessor's Book.

[By Associated Press.]

Washington, D. C., Dec. 27.—President Roosevelt is "learning the game." He has taken a leaf out of the book of his predecessor and is rapidly mastering the rather difficult art of disposing of his numerous callers. During the last week the president has instituted a wholly new method. Formerly he received most of his callers in the big room where Secretary Cortelyou used for an office, just as Mr. McKinley used to do.

But Mr. Roosevelt's manner was different from Mr. McKinley's. The new president had a way of going from one caller to another, as all hands stood about in the center of the apartment, talking to them briefly in turn. Mr. Roosevelt did most of the talking, and not only the man he was talking to but every one else in the room heard what he said. Occasionally his words could be heard out in the hall. It never entered the president's mind that his visitors were likely to be embarrassed by this public way of doing things. To them it was not pleasant to be told, "I can't do that," "I won't do that," "I will not appoint that man," with a dozen or a score of people overhearing every word.

Now the president is doing things in a different way. He takes his callers one after another over to the corner of the room, as Mr. McKinley used to do, and sits down for a cozy, quiet chat. It is now impossible for even the humblest office seeker to get his turning down without having the audience smiling at him for his pains. Occasionally during these interviews the president's voice breaks out in the old-time snapping, strenuous way, and then he takes himself in hand again and returns to what, for him, is a soft speech. The old-timers about the White house say President Roosevelt is learning and mastering his job with marvelous rapidity.
